FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Unable to speak to “Best Speaker” The story Katherine Miracle never wanted to tell

Someone’s past can be a shadow to their success. Katherine Miracle tried to hide her illness in junior high but as her eyelid began to droop, her speech became slurred and at moments she could not speak or even breathe well she could not hide anymore.

Why hide an illness? In junior high if you see double and you slur words you are accused of taking drugs and for Katherine the gossip and rumors hurt her and her family. Katherine’s parents Betty and Gene Robinson never accused their daughter; instead they took her to every doctor until the diagnosis of Myasthenia Gravis (MG) was found.

Katherine had surgery and took medicine until 1988 when she met her Miracle, her husband Craig Miracle. As an adult Katherine remembers what it was like to be considered the sick kid and to not want people to ask about the scar on her chest. Katherine wrote a book called “Discovering Your Dawn” to help college students and she finally shared part of her story but never spoke about it.

On Wednesday, February 23rd, Katherine was awarded Best Speaker by CBC Magazine. A great honor for a person who at one time could barely speak and who was not expected to have the quality of life to be a speaker who travels the United States.
